Greg Jenkins is a dedicated and passionate consultant, practitioner and life-long learner. Greg completed a successful 28+ year US Army career that ranged from overseas duties in Germany, South Korea, and combat duty in Iraq to include several stateside assignments culminating in Washington D.C. While serving in uniform Greg's performance leading Military Equal Opportunity efforts resulted in developing a model program for other US Army Equal Opportunity and human relations advisors.

His performance further resulted in his selection to the Army's Diversity Task Force at the Pentagon, which helped to establish the Army's Diversity program, policies and products. He was instrumental in the planning and execution the Army's Diversity marketing campaign achieving world-wide coverage for the Army's 1.4M Soldiers, Civilians, and their family members. Greg has directly served and represented senior executive leaders at the local, state, and Department of Defense levels.

His work with various organizations, along with educational and community leaders resulted in improved civic relationships, shared knowledge, and higher performance. Greg is an experienced facilitator who has provided training, facilitation and oversight for thousands of personnel ensuring quality and relevant Military Equal Opportunity, Diversity and Leadership training and education for mid, senior and executive level managers and leaders.

Now after successfully completing his Army career, Greg continues to provide high performance facilitation, instruction, research and analytics, strategy, curriculum development and delivery. As a private consultant Greg provides facilitation to various government agencies including the; VA, USDA, US Army, National Guard and various corporate partners. Greg has a MA in Human Resources Development from Webster University, and he is a published author and passionate volunteer who actively mentors and coaches several civilian, US Military service members and veterans.
